It's been 25 years since Kenny Scharf's last solo exhibition in Paris!

Following a proposal from New York gallery owner Tony Shafrazi, Emmanuel Barth, Doriane and Enrico Navarra now hope to make up for this by hosting the exhibition Paradis Perdu at Galerie 75 Faubourg from October, 22 to November 23th, 2018.

The opening will take place at the gallery on October 20th from 3pm onwards, and will have a late-night conclusion in the VIP Room, where original works created for this event will be displayed.

Kenny Scharf is too often reduced to his reputation as survivor of the trio he formed with Jean-Michel Basquiat and Keith Haring... But he is above all the creator of the coherent work of a persevering artist, who has made no concessions either to the Zeitgeist or to the passing of time.

He brings new life to litter, to more or less obsolete cars, and to the discards of consumer society by using such objects as blank canvases on which to paint. For let us not forget that Kenny Scharf is first and foremost a painter! He works quickly but like a workaholic, with discipline, enthusiasm and goodwill. With humour too: he caricatures his neuroses and makes a concerted effort to direct attention to his concerns for the environment.

There is, in the world of Kenny Scharf, something reminiscent of the so-called extraordinary gardens, quite different from those of Michel Tournier, which are arranged too meticulously, and which rely so heavily on their human creators that they are lost with them. No! Kenny Scharf's Paradis Perdu is an uninterrupted series of gardens, the sort that one might discover during the stopovers on an amazing Jules Verne adventure or admire from the window of a new Nautilus.

This paradise, rooted in the human past and lost only to them, is also the paradise of the future, a paradise free from their grasp which replenishes itself without them.

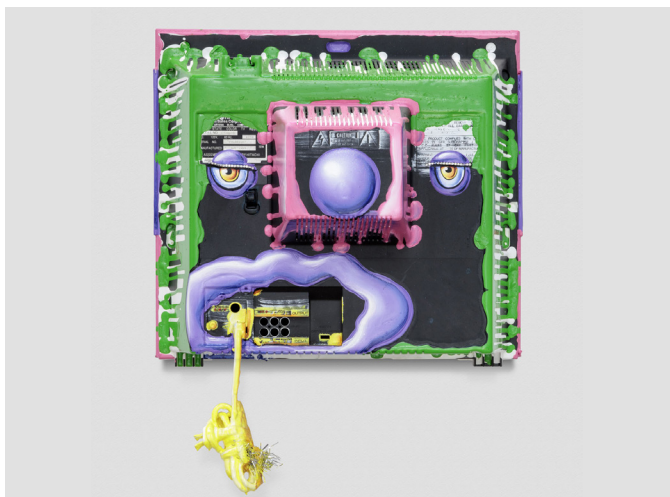

But, without a doubt, it's the lost paradise of the imagination in a society which now seeks ever more realism, information and pragmatism, leaving less and less room for dreams and fantasy.

For further proof, one need only read commentaries on the works of Jean-Michel Basquiat and Keith Haring. The general public and critics alike focus mainly on the political and societal components of their works, dismissing the incredible conception of new mythologies by the first artist and the iconographic universal dimension created by the second.

What is the role of imagination in today's world? What is the role of the imaginary in contemporary art? This is what is called into question by Kenny Scharf's Paradis Lost that we need to discover without delay.

Paradis Perdu and Arbre de Vie de Pluie plunge us into a utopic vision of the hope of a better world, to which the artist aspires. A world which will cease to exist if we do not act. These works bear witness to his engagement with ecology and to a world more reactive to the actions of humans who manhandle and mistreat it.

In the series TV Bax, the artist collects televisions abandoned on city streets, offering them new lives by painting brightly-coloured faces on them.

The series Assemblage of Living Paintings (Whatsamagidget and Pony Express), for its part, is made up of wall assemblages created with plastic toys and games found by the artist. He uses paint, beads, and plastic decorations, overlapping them to create fantastical and intimate dioramas which make references to his fears for the planet.

Finally, his series Space Vomit was assembled using rubbish found in the street and in his workshop, which he has recycled into works of art. It is through these eccentric and flashy canvases that Kenny Scharf wishes to alert us to the damage done by society, and to the accumulation of rubbish which humans continue to generate on our planet.
